The printing type for seat covers usually classify into silk screen printing, ink jet printing, and thermal transfer. Screen printing also named silk printing is making a graphic screen printing plate through the photosensitive plate-making method. Ink jet printing is a kind of printing close to photo printing. It is the transfer of the probe from the microplate to the treated support. For thermal transfer, the process is pattern designing, making the color copper plate, pattern printing on PET film, and lastly, transfer the design on to the products. To make a long story short, silkscreen print can be used for single or multiple solid colors while ink jet printing is usually for gradient colors. For sophisticated patterns / designs which need dedicated attention to details, thermal transfer is the first choice.
